

Bees use a stop signal to warn nest mates of danger, say scientists. They described in Current Biology journal how bees that were attacked while out foraging stopped nest mates from guiding other bees to the dangerous place. Here, the bee marked with pigment freezes when it receives the signal.